The nice thing is, as you're drawing this curve you can sort of fudge the line and make those curves gentle if your seams don't match up exactly. So when you start stitching, you want to have as few breaks in your thread as possible, and you want to pivot as much as possible so that you don't have any loose ends that you need to tie up.

In all normal curves half the scores lie to the left of the mean and half to the right. The value of the standard deviation determines the spread; the bigger σ , the more spread out or σ -wide, the curve. If you would like to learn more about means and standard deviations, you can read the Mathematics Learning Centre booklet: Descriptive Statistics.

Stitch around the edges of all the pieces. I like to use black thread and a simple straight stitch. You can use a zigzag or other decorative stitch if you prefer. If you want a little help knowing where to start and in what order to stitch the pieces, this post should help you out. And this one will help you with managing those tight curves ...
