The Dementia Grief Model. Failure of the dynamic mechanism is hypothesized to inhibit the grief trajectory, adding to the distress of the caregiver. We propose that the dementia grief process is vulnerable to being stalled through a failure of the dynamic mechanisms: acknowledging loss, tolerating difficult feelings,...

Unfortunately, grief is not a topic of in-depth discussion at most medical schools or general medical or psychiatry residency training programs. Thus, myth and innuendo substitute for evidence-based wisdom when it comes to understanding and dealing with this universal, sometimes debilitating human experience.

Abstract. Loss of a loved one usually leads to acute grief characterized by yearning and longing, decreased interest in ongoing activities, and frequent thoughts of the deceased. For most, acute grief naturally evolves into a state of integrated grief, where the bereaved is able to reengage with everyday activities and find interest or pleasure.
