High-altitude view of the San Francisco Bay region showing surface traces of the Hayward and Calaveras faults. The Hayward fault was the source of two large earthquakes in 1836 and 1868 that caused surface rupture along as much as 64 km of its trace.

horizontal ground motions within the soil column (i.e. acceleration, stress, strain time histories) are often computed using dynamic soil response models such as SHAKE (Schnabel et al 1972), ProShake 2004, DESRA (Lee and Finn 1978) and SUMDES (Li et al 2000). The input, or bedrock, ground motions required for these numerical models are

These four groups of IMs can describe the various characteristics of ground motions from different perspectives. However, the significance of different parameters of ground motions is dependent on the type of engineering problems (Kramer, 1996), while soil liquefaction may rely on the amplitude, frequency, and duration of the ground motion.
